

No Going back! - UK to Corfu

For 15 years Emma and James Wood had worked long hours as company directors, whilst always wanting more time with family. Following a blissful 10-day break to Corfu last November, they decided to make a complete lifestyle change and move there permanently with their three sons, their partners and grandson.

James drove a lorry 5 times across Europe to achieve their 8-person relocation in March. In April they opened The Corfu Property Shop in Barbati, on the north-east coast. Emma, a Greek speaking entrepreneur with a flair for marketing and advertising and James with almost 25 years property experience have been quick to gain an excellent reputation for their new agency. Last month they joined forces with Savills International to create the first Savills associate office in the Ionian.

Emma commented 'whether you are looking for a luxury villa, holiday apartment, renovation project or investment opportunity you can now use the same name abroad that you trust at home. Unlike other agencies here we don't charge the buyer commission because we believe it is unethical. We can even search for your dream property with our easyfinder™ service. We are pleased we made the move - more sun, fantastic landscapes, cheaper property, strong family values and more time for one another - we are all much happier'.
